What it is

---

<https://varunvanam.github.io/BreatheHere>

- It is a safe haven for the people the city who currently are(or planning on) working on themselves.
  - A website where one can experience the way of yoga and lifestyle around it.
  - The website will help you in finding events at your locality conducted by social groups in the community.
  - And also help you see how the people living such lifestyle go about their day and share their experience.
  - I can join the community by making themselves a profile on the website to share their experience or join an event.

Why it is here

---

- This focuses on solving a community issue.
  - The main reason for such situation to occur in a locality is lack of awareness in the communities and scare of facilities and infrastructure to practice such activities.
  - This website helps one reach out to like minded people in the community. Help them practice such activities and know more about the lifestyle.

How it is

---

- The 3 heuristics are :
    - Blog page
      - This page has the new and articles written by the members of the community about their experiences, stories, guidance about the way of yoga and much more.
    - Login form
      - This page lets you become a member of the community so that you can register for events and write blogs (Authentication).
    - Events page
      - This page displays the upcoming events and their details. They take you to a registration form.

And it is...

- The website structure and functionality has been implemented.
- Working on different predefined classes of Bootstrap was challenging.
- Tried adding proper Authentication process through Google Firebase, but it didn't make it to the final build.
- With proper profiles setup, mailing list for subscribers using MailChimp is the best way to spread the blog posts and details about the events.
- Instead of hosting the website using Firebase, I used Github to build the website quicker and with no additional dependencies as such.
